CHAIRMAN McCALLA

IN a statement issued from Phoenix yesterday, M. H. McCalla announced his resignation as chairman of the Democratic States Central Committee. McCalla's administration of Democratic affairs in the state has been attended by stormy sessions and little success, but this has not been due to a lack of effort on the part of the state chairman. Called to the helm at a time when Democratic success was impossible, due to after-war effects, McCalla spared neither time nor expense toward the promotion of harmony in Democratic ranks. And, when the history of the Democratic party shall have been written, one of the outstanding figures will be that of M. H. McCalla-a man and a Democrat.

FORT APACHE

LAST winter when word reached Arizona from Washington that Fort Apache would be abandoned as a military post a protest went up from every quarter. The legislature then in session passed resolutions calling upon the precident and congress to rescind the order. But the troops left on the day specified by the war department which wrote the Arizona legislature a polite letter saying reduction in the numbers of the army, and inaccessibility of the post in the White mountains, made it necessary for the troops to leave.

But recent developments have indicated the abandonment of the post for military purposes was not a blow to progress in Arizona. The post had served its purpose, the Apache Indians had long since ceased to be hostile, and military protection in that part of the state was not 1 0 70 70 needed.

What then? Simply the government is going to make of Fort Apache a great Indian school, especially for the education of the children of the Navajo and White mountain Apache tribes. It is understood 5,000 such children are without education. They are scattered about the northeachern part of Arizona in remote and isolated Indian

The barracks and other buildings of the old post will accommodate about 1,000 children and instructors. Improvements on a large scale are anticipated. The backwardness of the Navajo is considered due to the lack of schools. The Pimas, for illustration, have on their reservation all children in school. The Fort Apache property soon will be transferred by the war department to the Indian department. Plans for the improvement of the post for school purposes are not available at this writing, but enough has been said officially to give every assurance that Fort Apache soon will be a great Indian school.

Fort Apache was established in 1869 by soldiers from Fort Goodwin on the Gila river. It first was named Camp Ord, after the department commander, then it was named Fort Mogollon and finally Fort Apache. It is situated in the White mountains, ninety miles south of Holbrook. It was the last, save one, of the Arizona posts, the last being Fort Huachuca, on the border. Army cantonments are maintained at Douglas and Nogales.-Arizona Gazette.

TOO OLD FOR THE GAME

COME, let us philosophically ponder about time, how it drags back the runners and wearies, the fighters, turns the rackets in the strongest fists and nicks the nerves of phlegmatic putters. Age only keeps its championship. The crick in the back and the woosey eye eventually will mock the tall cups arrayed on the most triumphant mantlepleces. Though some have broken tape, driven, smashed, straight-righted and home-running into seeming immortality and scared old age into second place, truly time only draws its crowd in the end.

And the end comes with what a rush! One generation sees a dozen golfers quit the championship, a double dozen baseballers, 50 fighters, countless trackmen-all resign the brief title of "greatest." But soonest fades the green, budding laurel of the boy marble shooters! "Buster," he of Jersey City, rose to dizzy heights in a year. In a year he has reached the age limit, aetat 14, an old timer, seasoned in the dirt ring of Pershing Field, too old to knuckle down, too wise to struggle longer against his fate.

Perhaps "Buster" will cheat time yet. He intends to meet all challengers before retiring; and should he step out of the running with the grin of success he may step into modified immortality (boys' style) and deserve the envy which sweetens fame. But sigh for him-another good champ grown old.-Tucson Star.

RUSSIA'S REAL WEALTH

DURING the dazzling display of the Russian Crown jewels a Bolik dropped a gem of a remark. Apropos of a diadem of ears of wh at he said: "This is the true wealth of Russia; not platinum. nor diamonds wrung from the sweat of workers, but Russia's own natural grain, her noblest jewel." But Russia is despoiled of that real wealth as truly as of the Czarist jewels. She can endure the loss of her public jewels far better than the near famine which all Russians must suffer so long as the Soviets are implacable in their policies.

The real robbery of Russia'is not the confiscation of what exists, zut the drying up of the sources of production. The country districts will not sustain the cities and the cities will not sustain the country until each produces a surplus above its necessities. Property and prefits are the mainspring of human activities. The nation which is administered only for the benefit of the proletariat is doomed to perpetual poverty for all. Machinery is the sole hope of abundance for the poor, and machinery cannot be had without capital and reward for capital. The doctrines which have produced apparent scarcity, if not actual famine, in Europe's chief granary are the true destroyers of Russia's wealth .- New York Times.

Alex Campbell, a well known mining man of this city, returned yesterday from an extended trip in Sonora, where he was looking after mining interests. Hardly had he reached home before he made a misstep and fell, an excedingly bad fracture of the leg resulting. Both bones of the member were broken.

Dr. Hart reduced the fracture. Last night the injured man was reported resting as easily as could be expected. He will be confined to his bed, however for several weeks.
